

Improving health and social care in West Hertfordshire

A new vision for the future

Foreword

Dr Nicolas Small
Chair - Your Care, Your Future Programme

We've reached an important milestone. Following months of work with local people: patient representatives, service users, carers, clinicians, voluntary sector colleagues and other stakeholders, we've developed a new approach to expand local services. This document summarises this new approach.

Change really is needed. Our lifestyles mean that too many of us are living with a health condition that we could have prevented. People are making unnecessary journeys to hospitals, which are already overloaded. Our health and care services face a financial shortfall of millions of pounds and far too many of our buildings are not fit for modern health and social care.

The lack of joined-up care and information-sharing among health and social care professionals is adding to these pressures, with people's experience and support being affected every day.

Our vision is that people are healthier – we want to prevent people from becoming ill in the first place. We want people to get the care they need in the right place – often close to where they live – at the right time. More joined up community health and social care services will help people stay well and get the support they need. It will also help us live within our means.

The feedback we have received is very clear. You've told us that we should focus on preventing ill health, expanding local services and joining up care. Read about our plans on pages 6,7 and 8.

Some people will continue to need expert care in hospital. We need to re-organise the way we provide hospital care and you can read more about this on page 9. There is some excellent care being provided in West Hertfordshire – in our hospitals and our communities - and we thank all the staff for all the great work they do.

There is a considerable amount of work to do to ensure our vision becomes a reality. Thank you for your continued interest and involvement in the review – we really want you to stay involved and help us expand local services.

Cllr Colette Wyatt-Lowe
Chair - Hertfordshire Health and Wellbeing Board and Cabinet Member for Health and Adult Care

Summary of the vision

The Your Care, Your Future review has a clear purpose - to consider what changes are needed to ensure the people of West Hertfordshire have access to the best possible health and social care services.

To inform the review - and consider what needs to change - we have undertaken extensive engagement work and listened to a range of views from people across the four localities: Dacorum, St Albans & Harpenden, Watford & Three Rivers and Hertsmere.

Expanding local services

Our vision, based on the extensive feedback we have received, is to ensure more people can access the care and support they need in their own community, rather than travel to hospital unnecessarily.

By 2024 we would like 40% of current hospital trips shifted to a community setting. Patients' experience and the quality of care they receive will be better. We also want to ensure care is joined-up and better co-ordinated.

To deliver this, we will develop health and wellbeing hubs in local communities across West Hertfordshire. Some GP and other primary care services will be available at the hubs. In addition to the health and wellbeing hubs many older and disabled people, and people with dementia and other conditions, will continue to receive the care they need in their own home.

We know we need to improve connections between health and social care services as well as other parts of the community such as public libraries, gyms and services provided by voluntary organisations.

There are many different services available – but too often they are fragmented. We need to make it easier for people to access the care they need.

“We must challenge the status quo. Our health and social care services must be organised around patients' needs. We need to remove the boundaries between GPs, community based staff such as pharmacists, hospital doctors and the social care workforce.”

Geoff Brown, Chief Executive of Healthwatch Hertfordshire

Acute care at hospital

Acute services in West Hertfordshire have also been considered as part of the overall Your Care, Your Future review.

The development of more local care will mean that some services that are currently provided at Watford (or another district general hospital) will be available to patients locally.

Turn to page 9 to find out more about the work going on to consider how we best organise acute hospital care (such as care in an emergency or for a planned operation) in the future.

Introducing Your Care, Your Future

The Your Care, Your Future review was launched in November 2014. It involves NHS organisations in West Hertfordshire working together with Hertfordshire County Council to consider how to organise health and social care to best meet the needs of people now and for future years.

Visit: www.yourcareyourfuture.org.uk - for up-to-date information on the review.

Why is change needed?

About 140,000 people in West Hertfordshire have one or more long term conditions such as diabetes, heart or lung disease

On average, people living in Chorleywood West live 10 years longer than those in Borehamwood

More than 1 in 10 expectant mums in West Hertfordshire smoke during pregnancy

At least 26,000 children in 2012/13 were seen by urgent care or A&E staff but were not admitted to hospital

£320 million – the estimated gap in required income for health and social care by 2024/25

There is broad agreement among members of the public and clinicians that leaving health and social care services in West Hertfordshire as they are is not a viable option.

As in other areas across the UK:

- There's a changing population
- More people are living with complex health and social care needs
- We need to agree how we can best live within our means.

The vision for health and social care services in West Hertfordshire

Our vision is for people of all ages living in West Hertfordshire to be healthier and have better care that is joined-up and responsive to their individual needs, much closer to where they live.

Below is a fictional account of Claire, aged 58, who lives in West Hertfordshire. We have based her story on examples of people's real-life situations.

The current situation

Claire has diabetes and heart disease. She has lived well with these long term conditions but has recently lost her job, making her feel depressed and her health has deteriorated. She's had to stay in hospital a couple of times because of urine infections and is finding it hard to juggle all her appointments at the main hospital with the diabetes and heart specialists.

The appointments are on different days of the week and make it hard for Claire to spend time finding a new job. She's also spending money getting to the hospital, which she really can't afford at the moment, which is adding to her pressures.

In the future: better connected care, closer to home

Claire has diabetes and heart disease, which she manages well with support from a team of specialists she can see at her local health and wellbeing hub. Recently made redundant, Claire started to feel depressed but was able to quickly access advice and support at the hub.

When her diabetes nurse noticed she was developing a urine infection the team were able to respond quickly to stop it getting worse. At the hub, not only does Claire have the support of a 'community navigator' to ensure she has appointments with specialists, she can also access information about local support groups, volunteering opportunities and education and training, all of which have helped her in her search for a new job.

If Claire needs to be seen for more specialist treatment, or needs to have a planned operation, she is referred by her GP to hospital. Before she is discharged home the hospital team is able to link up with her team at the health and wellbeing hub to ensure appropriate care and support are in place meaning she can get home more quickly.

Making the new vision a reality

“I completely support this model. I can’t stress how vital it is that we put prevention at the top of the list when thinking about how services are organised in West Hertfordshire. If we can address ill health and social problems caused by obesity, Type 2 diabetes and mental health we will be giving our children and young people the best start in life.”

Dr Keith Hodge, Dacorum GP

Pages 6, 7 and 8 will explain how we will better connect care and ensure it takes place closer to home, and you can find much more detailed information at www.yourcareyourfuture.org.uk.

Prioritising prevention of ill-health

On average five or six children in every classroom in Watford are obese and more and more adults are living with long term conditions, such as Type 2 diabetes.

community organisations to ensure people have the support to stay well. This is what you have told us you want the review to focus on and prevention is therefore the foundation of future health and social care plans in West Hertfordshire.

In many cases, these conditions can be prevented through lifestyle changes. In West Hertfordshire we need to work together – as families and in our communities – to stay well.

By encouraging people to adopt healthy behaviours, for example not smoking, eating a balanced diet and taking regular exercise, we can make a big impact in terms of preventing many illnesses in the first place. New health and wellbeing hubs will provide advice on preventing ill health and work with

Starting well, living well, ageing well...

Children and young people

Children will be the focus of future plans and greater emphasis will be placed on ensuring children have the skills they need to stay healthy and well from the earliest age.

“Supporting young people to lead healthy, happy lives is a key priority for us and we must ensure that early signs of mental ill health are recognised and acted upon. All partners must work together to provide support at the earliest possible opportunity and ensure that young people know where to turn to for help and that the right support is there when they need it.”

Richard Roberts, Cabinet Member for Children’s Services, Hertfordshire County Council

Adults

There will be greater emphasis on physical and mental wellbeing and keeping us all healthy, such as more weight management, exercise or cooking classes being provided in local community settings. It’s also important that carers get the help and support they need.

“Many adults have largely preventable illnesses, such as Type 2 diabetes. There’s a strong case for shifting more resources to the community, and utilising the multi professional networks, to ensure fewer people become ill in the first place.”

Girish Mehta, Chair of Hertfordshire Local Pharmaceutical Committee

Older people

Older people often have multiple long term conditions, as well as complex health and social care needs, and many may also have dementia, so our new approach provides more joined-up services closer to home. Better coordination between services will also be crucial to help minimise hospital stays and to enable those that do need to stay in hospital to get home more quickly.

“We need a much more joined up approach to care of older people with multiple health conditions. My father in law has been pushed around a totally unconnected system and desperately needs someone to help him navigate it.”

Better connected care, closer to home

We’ve developed plans for how health and social care should be provided based on these two key principles you’ve told us are important:

- You should be able to get most of the care you need close to where you live
- All the organisations involved in your care should be connected to each other and work together so that people receive joined-up care and don’t have to repeat information about themselves all the time.

Expanding and joining up local health, social care, voluntary sector support and other existing local services will help carers, and means we can help people to stay out of hospital, to be healthier and to feel physically and mentally better. Over the page we explain how we plan to do that.

Better connected care, closer to home

More care at home, for example, social care services but also services like speech and language therapy for people who have returned home following a stroke.

Existing community services - as well as visiting your GP, pharmacist, dentist or optometrist, some people will need other services such as physiotherapy or community nursing services. We are also keen to ensure more people can easily benefit from the care, advice and support from voluntary organisations and be referred to facilities such as gyms and libraries.

Hospital care – sometimes called ‘acute’ care. There will be some services that will need to be provided from a larger centre with specialist teams, skills and equipment. This includes services such as A&E, specialised care for stroke and some cancer treatments, planned surgery and inpatient care, and diagnosis and treatment of complex conditions.

Given the differences between the four localities in West Hertfordshire – and therefore the varying health and social care needs of the different communities – the services in each area will need to be developed to meet those specific needs. We will want ongoing input from local people as the plans start taking shape.

30% of all outpatient attendances currently delivered in hospitals are expected to shift to health and wellbeing hubs. Hospital and specialist expertise will be available on demand if required.

Health and wellbeing hubs

We are planning to develop hubs across West Hertfordshire, and we are currently looking at four initial sites in Elstree, South Oxhey, Hemel Hempstead and Harpenden. The hubs will create a network of services closer to where people live, meaning in many cases people won't have to travel far to get the care they need. Health and social care teams will be based together in the same place to deliver more joined-up care, sharing information and decision making.

The hubs will offer services according to local needs including:

- Health promotion and prevention services, such as stop smoking and weight loss clinics
- Some GP, pharmacy, optometry and dentistry services alongside community and social care
- A range of tests and treatments traditionally offered in hospitals such as x-rays, ultrasound scans, blood tests, physiotherapy services, mental health services, minor surgery, rehabilitation services and outpatient clinics for children
- Health and wellbeing hubs will be able to offer urgent care too, helping to prevent many unnecessary journeys to an A&E department and even prevent hospital admissions
- In some hubs there will also be some community beds for people needing short stays before returning home; also some urgent care services, for example to treat minor injuries
- We would like services to be located or linked with children's centres and voluntary sector organisations. This will help people access information about dance and reading classes, as well as support groups such as those for carers who look after someone with dementia or another condition.

“Expanding care closer to where people live will mean high quality and safer services for local people. People will experience more joined up care as local providers will work together in a network of health, social care, wellbeing and community services, reducing the need for people to travel to hospital.”

Dr Michael Van der Watt, Consultant Cardiologist,
West Hertfordshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Improving hospital services in West Hertfordshire

We need to make changes to the way care is organised in hospitals. Many people are being treated in hospitals across England who would be better cared for in the community. West Hertfordshire is no exception. As this booklet has made clear, we plan to shift some hospital care closer to where people live. To do that - and for the reasons set out here - we need to reorganise hospital care:

- To improve the quality of care
- To ensure better clinical results
- To help the NHS recruit and retain the right staff with the right skills
- To help ensure services are affordable: for example, West Hertfordshire Hospitals NHS Trust has a deficit

Developing options for the future

Experts have looked carefully at the viable options for providing acute services in the future. Eight options have been considered against the same criteria. You can find more details about the options at www.yourcareyourfuture.org.uk

During September 2015 we tested the options, asking people to help identify the pros and cons for each one. We held meetings with 75 patient representatives, carers and other stakeholders; GPs, medical directors and other clinicians tested clinical and safety issues; and finance directors tested whether the options were affordable. Senior leaders within the County Council and NHS organisations have considered the feedback carefully.

This work has enabled us to shortlist the three highest scoring options. We will continue to test options and we will carry out further detailed analysis in 2016. We will keep an open mind about the best solution. We welcome your feedback on all the options and any other potential scenarios you would like us to consider.

- Option 1 centralise acute and planned care at a new hospital in a central location
- Option 2 centralise acute and planned care at Watford
- Option 3 locating acute care at Watford and planned care at St Albans

Next Steps: Delivering better connected services, closer to home

We want to build on the best services that exist already. Some change can happen over the next few months such as extending the Rapid Response scheme to St Albans; some change is underway but will take longer, such as developing a new urgent care service.

We will involve people in the design and implementation of expanding local services.

We do not underestimate the scale of the task ahead – and anticipate this will take place over a period of several years. Planning is underway to expand and integrate local services.

We will need to consider which services are required and where they are located. The plans will need to take into account a host of other key factors to ensure successful implementation, including:

Staff – not simply numbers of staff, but what mix of skills, professions and/ or volunteers might be needed.

Buildings and facilities – many of our buildings are no longer fit for modern healthcare. Change is needed.

Information management and technology – connections are about people, but information management and technology – using computers and mobile phones more – will be critical to the success of the proposed integrated approach. It will mean a more seamless approach to people’s care.

To ensure that these plans work for local people, we need to continue to hear from you. A comprehensive programme of information sharing and engagement will continue.

We envisage that advisory panels comprising community and clinical representatives will be established. If you would like more information please email us at info@yourcareyourfuture.org.uk

We’re continuing to engage, and so far we’ve heard from...

-  120+ stakeholder meetings and events
-  783 public survey responses
-  120 clinician survey responses
-  5,705 website users
-  258 Twitter followers

How to keep up to date with the review

Thank you to everyone who has contributed to the review so far – your feedback has been extremely valuable.

We want you to remain involved. We will continue to share information with you in your communities so that you can:

- a) get involved in helping design how services should be organised in your community, and
- b) share your views on the options for hospital services in West Hertfordshire and any alternative solutions you would like us to consider

To have your say, please email:

info@yourcareyourfuture.org.uk

If you organise a patient or community group and would like a representative of the review team to attend one of your meetings, please contact us by:

- Emailing: info@yourcareyourfuture.org.uk
- Tweeting us: @YCYF_westHerts
- Visiting: www.yourcareyourfuture.org.uk

Alternatively, call Healthwatch Hertfordshire on 01707 275978 to speak to someone about your experiences of health and social care in West Hertfordshire.
